A few words about the screen in the lobby

Opening Remarks Delivered at the Haus am Lindenplatz.

Dear residents, dear family members, dear colleagues,

There's something new hanging in the foyer today, and I'd like to say a few words to explain what it's all about. You've probably already noticed the large screen next to the entrance. It's not a TV, and it's not meant to be one either.

What it shows is simple and useful: what day it is today and the date. What's for lunch, in print that's easy to read even without glasses. When gym class starts, when the choir rehearses, and when the bus leaves for the field trip. And whose birthday it is this week, so we don't forget anyone.

For our residents' family members who are coming from farther away, it shows them the way to the right room and the visiting hours. If you speak another language, you can select it with the push of a button. The system behind it, ScreenWay, operates right here on-site and doesn't send any data outside. Your information stays with us.

One thing is important to me: This screen doesn't take the work away from anyone who listens to you. It doesn't replace a conversation, a helping hand, or a "good morning" at the door—it just takes care of the little repetitive tasks so we have more time for what really matters.

Give it a try. Take a look at it in the morning when you go to breakfast. And if you notice something missing that should be there, let us know, and we'll bring it over. The screen is there for you. With that in mind: a warm welcome to our new little roommate in the lobby.
